Thesis

Title A tale between Finance and Economics : four essays on the history and methodology of the efficient market hypothesis

Summary My Ph.D dissertation focuses on the history of the efficient market hypothesis, a concept that is central to financial economics but also extremely controversial. My work studies the evolution of the concept market efficiency over the XXth century. After rooting the origins of this concept in American institutionalism in the first half of the 20th century, I analyze its modern formulations in the 1960s and 1970s within the emerging financial economics.
